MANAGEMENT TRAINING NEEDS ASSESSMENT

A good manager may be described in many different ways. Through the research of several experts on managerial competencies, the OTE Management Staff has compiled a rough, non-inclusive list of the knowledge, skills and abilities (SKA's) commonly related as attributes of successful managers. In order to review OTE's current training programs, make adjustments and implement new training programs, we first need to examine the necessity of training for these identified SKA's. How important is training for the development of these competencies and when would training be most appropriate?

Look at the SKA for each of the given levels of management. Using the scale of 1 - 5, (1 training not needed and 5 training is very essential), decide how necessary training is to the development of that competency.

External Orientation- relates to the interaction between the organization and the broader arena within which it operates

1. Able to view directorate and Agency policies within the context of broad national priorities
2. Understand U.S. foreign and national security policy interests in situations affecting work
3. Understand purposes of the Agency as a component of the government and as an institution in a democratic society
4. Understand the relationships among and the workings of the Congress, the White House and other components of the national security and foreign policy community
5. Understand social and political forces affecting Agency mission
6. Recognize the special responsibilities of the public trust and legal constraints on components' activities
7. Know organization and responsibilities of the Agency and its major components
8. Possess good overview and understanding of Agency mission as well as the functions/interactions of/with other directorates and their role in the intelligence process
